REPORT

Faculty Development Programmes (FDPs) are vital for enhancing the professional competence and teaching effectiveness of faculty members. By fostering continuous learning and innovation, such initiatives help educators stay updated with emerging trends in their disciplines while improving the overall academic experience of students. FDPs also serve as platforms for collaboration, research, and the integration of industry practices into academics.

The PG Department of Commerce organized a two-day Faculty Development Programme from May 27th to 28th, 2025. It aimed to introduce new methodologies, innovative teaching practices, and technological competencies, thereby promoting professional development among the faculty.

May 27, 2025: The first day of the FDP featured sessions by Dr. Rajagopala Nair, who led insightful discussions on: Emerging trends in commerce education, Innovative teaching methods, Innovative assessment methods beyond traditional exams, Industry–Academia collaboration, Exploring opportunities for joint projects and research initiatives, Science of Accounting and Share trading.

The resource person emphasised the importance of adopting creative pedagogical techniques and industry-oriented approaches in commerce education. Faculty members gained valuable perspectives on aligning academic delivery with real-world business practices and promoting experiential learning.

May 28, 2025: The second day included presentation of course plans by faculty members from 9.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., followed by academic planning sessions from 2.00 p.m. to 4.00 p.m. The activities encouraged collaborative discussion and strategic alignment of teaching plans with institutional goals and the evolving academic framework.

Overall, the FDP was highly enriching and provided a platform for professional exchange and academic innovation. It enhanced the participants' knowledge, teaching competencies, and enthusiasm to implement modern educational practices for student-centred learning.
