REPORT

In association with FHC Nalukettu, the NSS volunteers actively participated in the observance of National Deworming Day on 26 November 2024. As part of the initiative, they successfully distributed 300 deworming tablets to students across various departments. The primary objective of the programme was to promote better health and nutrition among the youth by preventing parasitic worm infections, which are known to adversely affect physical and cognitive development, especially in growing children and young adults.

In addition to the distribution of tablets, the volunteers took a proactive role in spreading awareness about the importance of personal hygiene, clean drinking water, regular handwashing practices, and the role of deworming in improving overall health. Informative sessions and brief interactions were held to educate students on how parasitic infections can be silently harmful and how timely deworming acts as a simple yet effective preventive measure.

The event played a significant role in fostering a culture of preventive healthcare within the campus. Students responded positively, showing keen interest in learning about wellness practices. The collaborative effort between NSS and FHC Nalukettu was appreciated by faculty and health officials alike, and it stood as a model of how community engagement can help promote vital public health messages in an educational setting.
